The Perfect Pumpkin

Maya walked between the rows of pumpkins. The air smelled like dry leaves and warm dirt. Most of the pumpkins were round and orange, but one little pumpkin near the fence was different. It had a tiny green leaf still growing from its stem, and when Maya touched it, the leaf twitched. Maya leaned closer and whispered, "Are you trying to tell me something?"

The Leaf Pile Secret

Jordan ran across the yard and jumped into the biggest pile of leaves on the block. Red, gold, and brown leaves flew up around him. Then he heard a soft rustle under the pile that did not sound like leaves. Something small scooted past his shoe. Jordan froze, held his breath, and peeked into the leaves.

The Highest Apple

Sam stood under the tallest apple tree in the orchard. A shiny red apple hung just out of reach, glowing in the morning sun. When Sam finally stretched high enough to touch it, the apple felt warm, not cool like the others. A soft humming sound came from inside. Sam looked around. No one else was nearby.

The Friendly Scarecrow

At the edge of the cornfield stood a scarecrow in a plaid shirt and a floppy straw hat. The wind moved through the corn, but the scarecrow's head turned a little farther than the wind could push it. One button eye seemed to wink. "You look like you need help," the scarecrow said in a dry, friendly voice. "I have been waiting for someone brave."

Follow That Squirrel

A gray squirrel sat on the path with an acorn in its paws. When it saw a visitor coming, it flicked its tail and darted into the woods. Every few steps it stopped and looked back, as if it wanted to be followed. The path wound between trees with red and gold leaves. Somewhere ahead, the squirrel chattered again, louder this time.
