Kitchen Helpers

The kitchen smelled like turkey, warm bread, and pumpkin pie. Avery stood on a stool and stirred the mashed potatoes while Grandpa checked the oven. Suddenly the lights blinked, then went out. The room was quiet for one second. Then Avery heard a soft knock coming from inside the pantry.

The Waiting Table

The long table was set with shiny plates, orange napkins, and a cornucopia full of squash and apples. Every chair was ready except one. A small envelope sat on that empty plate. On the front, in careful letters, it said, "Open before dinner." No one knew who had left it there.

The Backyard Turkey

Casey looked out the back door and froze. A big turkey was standing in the yard among the fallen leaves. It tilted its head, as if it were listening. Then it walked right up to the porch steps and dropped a shiny acorn by Casey's shoe. The turkey waited, blinking slowly, like it had something important to say.

The Gratitude Card

Riley had made a thank-you card with stickers, glitter, and one careful sentence inside. Family members were coming up the porch with covered dishes for dinner. Riley planned to give the card to Grandma. But when Riley opened it one more time to check the words, the sentence had changed all by itself.

Parade Day Surprise

The Thanksgiving parade filled Main Street with music, flags, and giant balloons. Morgan waved from the sidewalk as a harvest float rolled by. On the float stood a person in a corn costume, holding a small wooden box. The person looked straight at Morgan and tossed the box gently into Morgan's hands.
