Continue the Story

Name: _____ Date: _____

Trick-or-Treat Surprise

Quinn walked up the porch steps in a homemade costume, holding a pumpkin candy bucket. The porch light glowed warm and yellow. Before Quinn could knock, the door opened by itself, just a crack. A tiny paper bat swung from the knocker, and a soft voice from inside said, "Come in. I have been waiting for you."

Now finish the story.

Continue the Story

Name: _____ Date: _____

The Friendly Ghost

A soft white shape drifted above the leaf-covered path. It was a ghost, but it did not look scary. It smiled and waved one floaty arm. "Do not be afraid," it whispered. "I lost something important on Halloween night, and I think you can help me find it."

Now finish the story.

Continue the Story

Name: _____ Date: _____

The Talking Pumpkin

The jack-o'-lantern on the porch glowed with a bright orange light. Its carved smile looked almost alive. As Reese walked past, the pumpkin's eyes blinked. "Psst," it said in a warm, crackly voice. "I have a message for you, but you have to listen closely."

Now finish the story.

Continue the Story

Name: _____ Date: _____

The Midnight Cat

A black cat sat on the fence under the full moon. Its yellow eyes followed every step along the sidewalk. When it leaped down, it landed without a sound. Then it walked ahead a few paces, looked back, and meowed once, as if it wanted company on a secret errand.

Now finish the story.

Continue the Story

Name: _____ Date: _____

The Bubbling Cauldron

In the classroom, a big black cauldron bubbled with green foam for the Halloween party. Avery gave it one careful stir with a long wooden spoon. Suddenly the bubbles rose higher, and a small glowing marble floated up from the middle. It hovered in the air, waiting.

Now finish the story.